

put to use

Francisco Ezequiel

I think we have enough to put to good use. I like the past in whole. I like a lot of things that I remember. It feels like forever that I could only when, not whenever.

Some things I still do

I like the present. I think we're ok. I like that we talk. It isn't the same, but we have enough to put to good use; enough to get deeper. In time not so fragile, together, anymore.

Some things I still do

I do. And when I do, how I do, when I think, like finding pieces of anything, and making sure I find each one, frustrating sometimes not to keep, but to be sure I can squash it away and be done

These things I still do
I do different things too

